National Correspondent Misleads on Wheeler's Remarks

Yahoo News and New York Times Reporters aggregate false information

WASHINGTON (June 4, 2019) - Yesterday, Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) Administrator Andrew Wheeler addressed the National Press Club where he laid out priorities as Administrator and shared what he viewed to be biases in coverage regarding the Trump Administration's EPA.

Early in his remarks, Administrator Wheeler stated that "the media does a disservice to the American public and sound policy-making by not informing the public of the progress this nation has made." He noted this after discussing the immense progress the U.S. has made in reducing the six main criteria air pollutants and carbon emissions all while growing the economy.

While laying out these points, one reporter from Yahoo News decided to deliberately spread false information on twitter by misreporting Administrator Wheeler's comments. The tweet states " 'The media does a disservice to the American public' by reporting global warming, says EPA head Administrator Wheeler. Wants more positive coverage." This tweet was retweeted over 500 times by many in the media despite being false.

Not once in his speech, did Administrator Wheeler call on ignoring global warming. In fact, in the Q&A portion he stated that the Agency is addressing climate change with the upcoming Affordable Clean Energy (ACE) Rule.

This false tweet was aggregated by reporters from the New York Times who failed to fact check the tweet for its veracity, but rather used the inaccurate information to advance on their own narrative.

The false tweet was also used by special interest groups to promote their agenda.

For background and details, see the report on the EPA's response to the public comments on the draft rule.

Facts are a stubborn thing, and we hope the media will cover them as such.

Hi guys! So I have searched high and low for a Sierra Club fundraising 'mechanism' that either quotes or cites the New York Times. This is the Sierra Club tweet you cited in your press release and the only one I seen mentioned in articles. It cites the Yahoo reporter and links to his article -- but it doesn't RT or mention Kendra's tweet or my retweet of hers. It also isn't liked or RTed by any NYT reporters. The Sierra Club says that tweet is the only thing that went out - no fundraising emails or anything else digital.

Was there something else the administrator was referencing that you can show me that is the basis of Mr. Wheeler's collusion accusation?

Thanks so much
Lisa

I'm sorry to get to you the day after you published your story but would have greatly appreciated if you had reached out to us to confirm Yahoo News' take on Administrator Wheeler's comments that you attribute your piece to.

They got a lot wrong and I also was hoping you would correct a few things in your story as well.

Never in his speech Administrator Wheeler blame “the media for the public’s growing alarm over climate change.” The full context of his statement was: “the media does a disservice to the American public and sound policy-making by not informing the public of the progress this nation has made.”

He even stated “My purpose in doing this is not to minimize the environmental challenges or threats we face today. The press actually reminds me of them constantly” and addressed that “global energy-related CO2 emissions increased 20 percent since 2005” a few sentences beforehand while discussing the progress the U.S. has made in reducing its carbon footprint. Your story addresses that carbon dioxide levels are at a record high and ignored that he indicated higher global levels.
